Slow release, long lasting copper supplementation for cattle, calves, sheep and lambs

How OptiCop Works

- The bolus or capsule is inserted orally using a specially designed applicator.
- Copper oxide needles are released and lodge in the folds of the animal's stomach lining.
- Stores of copper build up in the liver as the needles dissolve slowly at a steady and consistent rate.
- The copper reserves that have built up in the liver are released gradually for approximately 6 months.

The Advantages of Using OptiCop

- Independently proven to be an effective way of supplementing copper, even in the presence of dietary antagonists, incl. molybdenum.
- Easy to use.
- Single application lasts for approximately 6 months.
- An optimum, known amount of copper is delivered to each animal, unlike other methods where greedy animals may take too much and others not enough.
- Good copper reserves in the mother at birthing, and in her milk, will ensure that her offspring have sufficient copper reserves.

Please note:

The copper status of the animals should be known, prior to use. It is recommended that a veterinarian's opinion should be sought before use. OptiCop should only be given using a suitable applicator.
